

Something not nothing

Atheism: religious people evade the tough questions. They just ask you to trust them

Questioner: Why is there something rather than nothing?

Atheism: ...

Atheism: We'll figure it out... trust us

Atheism: Here! "Nothing is not nothing.

Nothing is something" - Lawrence

Krauss, popular atheist/physicist

Questioner: Something is literally the opposite of nothing. What was that about evading the tough questions?

So, returning to our original question, Why is there something rather than because if God is a something rather than nothing, then it's not an answer at all. The question "Why is there anything at all?", or, "Why is there something rather than nothing?" has been raised or commented on by philosophers including Criticism of the question's - On cause - Explanations - See also. Leibniz thought that the fact that there is something and not nothing requires an explanation. The explanation he gave was that God wanted to. Here's the ultimate question: what if it were true that everything always and forever had been 'nothing'? Imagine that not a single thing ever existed--not. 13 Apr - 9 min - Uploaded by Problem Child Compiled By Sensient Artwork By Dennis Mareta. <https://zenonrecords.bbjournal.com> Possibly the most fundamental of all philosophical questions was first asked by Gottfried Leibniz in "Why is there something rather than nothing?" explained at last. There is a thing that I find disturbing in my atheist world view, some kind of "elephant in the room": why is there something and not nothing?. But there might not be an absolute answer to why it exists. I argue that any attempt to account for the existence of something rather than nothing. Why expect nothing rather than something? No experiment could support the hypothesis 'There is nothing' because any observation obviously. Physicist Lawrence Krauss peddles this message in his new book A Universe From Nothing: Why There Is Something Rather Than Nothing. Moving back to philosophy, we can look at Nothing as simply Not Something. Seen this way, Nothing and Something exist together, like conjugate pairs in. If you cannot imagine why there is something rather than nothing, you are probably a realistic person. Still you exist, so there must be something wrong with such. What we think of as empty space in our universe is not actually nothing; Thus the initial probability of there being nothing rather than something is one divided. Some physicists think they can explain why the universe first formed. Our entire cosmos may have sprung out of nothing at all. If, as the theist maintains, God is a being who exists of necessity, his existence explains why there is something rather than nothing. However, a less demanding. It's not a question it's the question and the more you think about it, the less sense it makes. First, my But the fact is, there isn't nothing there's something.
